THE RAUNT, Jamaica Bay, July 14.— "You say you took that big striped bass with cotton thread and used the same for that tackle smasling weakfish?

'I don't believe it." "That is your privilege, but it does not alter the fact, however, that I did take both fish with ordinary sewing cot-ton thread known as No. 24."

"No, you won't wager with me, if you have $5 to spend go over to that man carrying the rods and reem out of that yellow painted flatboaf and ask him to take you weakfishing with cotton thread. Make a date with him now or find the good tides already

The conversation took place to-day on Jimmis Jordan's float, It has happened odd times before, but the scoffers never seem to decrease. Yet the man who is willing to try the most sportsmanilke method of angling never fishes for weakfish again with anything but cotton

"Once a cotton threader always a cot-ton threader, eh. Augie?" This from the ton threader, eh. Augis?" This from the father of cotton thread fishing, James L. Jordan, to August Roth, one of the first to try the new method, who takes his vacation from his Wall Street office during the weeks when the two hish tides a day suit best for weakfishing.

Cutton threading, originally started to conserve the weakfishing of Jamaica Bay, has now spread all along the Atlantic coast until now in various waters cetton thread is used for fishing from Maine to Florida. Wherever the cotton threader soes he carries the gospel of cotton thread with him.
